COUNCIL APPROVES BUDGET

Mr. David Nash appeared before council to talk about the need for town water in a proposed subdivision of 30 to 35 homes in the northern section of the town just off Road 1009.

Mayor Pack spelled out the town's requirements that a developer bring the pipe to the town line --also, that such pipes within a development be in street and right-of-way areas for easier maintenance. In addition, he said, such out-of-town residents must pay higher rates.

Thomas E. (Sonny) Conner reporting on the "Rat Control" project said that a helpful meeting was held on Nov. 30 of the various committees and that rat bait concentrate would likely cost about 25¢ with filler making the total cost about $1.25 for participating residents.

Fire Dept. Committee chairman Martin L. Webb reported that lettering has now been put on the new fire truck. Costs of the tanker will total about $20,000, but no increase in the budget was necessary, according to councilman Holland because of a yearly set-aside fund of $1,000 plus interest earned on unused funds.

Firemen Complimented

In the dinner preceding the meeting mayor Pack said, "We're deeply grateful" to the firemen. He introduced special guests which included Mrs. Irene Kanipe, clerk of the county and town court; Mrs. Bobbie Mullins, secretary to the mayor and town manager; Paul Drinkard and James Ford (town policeman) who helped with the firemen's fund drive. Also, John C. Cole, supervisor, Southside district; town workers William McDilder, Ed Franklin, Harold Nash and Bobby McFadden. Jack Mayberry, another town worker, was unable to be present. Also, Sheriff Gene Richardson and deputy Cecil Rickmond.

The firemen's dinner was planned by the Firemen's Committee: Martin L. Webb, Mrs. Calvin Robinson and Burke Guill.

Also living in a part of the home were Mrs. Alice Watts and several small children. Mrs. Watts has located a place in Spout Spring, according to latest report. The children lost all of their belongings, and help is being sought for them: clothing, toys, household goods, etc.

Rattler Venom May Counter Blood Clots

Two Los Angeles medical researchers have succeeded in coaxing out a chemical from deadly rattlesnake venom that may save lives by preventing dangerous blood clots.

The recently - purified enzyme, extracted from the venom of the diamondback rattlesnake found in the Eastern U. S., acts on just one blood component vital to blood clotting. By removing it from the circulation, the venom extract makes effective clotting impossible.

Drs. Francis S. Markland, Jr. and Paul S. Damus of the UCLA School of Medicine reported their trials at the 44th annual Scientific Sessions of the American Heart Association.

They said the enzyme may be useful in preventing major clotting disorders, including heart attack, and pulmonary embolism, in which a traveling clot plugs up a lung artery and shuts off blood flow.

Their success in isolating and purifying the enzyme should also provide a valuable tool for studying the highly complex blood clotting process.

Normally, clotting involves a chain reaction among several substances. Set off by tissue injury, the chain sequence produces a compound called thrombin, which, in turn, converts fibrinogen into an active agent fibrin, the thread-like material that forms the actual clot.

Describing the venom extract as "thrombin-like", the Los Angeles scientists explained that the agent skips the chain reaction and acts directly on fibrinogen itself, infused slowly into experimental animals, the enzyme converts the fibrinogen to an abnormal fibrin that produces an easy-to-break-up and ineffective clot.

Meanwhile, the blood has been rendered essentially unclotable because there is now little if any fibrinogen available for activation by real thrombin.

The investigators reported no adverse effects on any other vital organs or functions in the test animals.
